

RADCLIFFE MSS 132

This book contains pedigrees. Some are printed pages, some beautifully written, with painted arms, others pencilled scribbles on the back of notes addressed to "William Radclyffe, Herald's College". There are occasional historical notes against some entries. There are some references, which seem obscure.

Letter, with seal, addressed to William Radclyffe Esq, College of Arms, St. Paul's, London.
"My dear Sir, I have filled this sheet with a descent from Edward first as I am much interested by it. I cannot wait till I get to London to ask you anything about it, but wish you would, if you can at liberty look over it and tell me whether you think it in the early part false, in the later it is true.....I do not wish to draw you into giving me much information ? troubling yourself and then to say I did not want a complete pedigree....but I wish now such confirmation of the descent as shall, or shall not, determine me to proceed - if it is correct. I shall hereafter undoubtedly beg you give me an authorised Ped. of the descent. Remain, my dear Sir, always yours truly E.P. 6 Sep 1820 Geo dade are I think lucky in having a descendant that cares two-pence about them. My transcripts from the Parish register are much more bulky, but I have only sent you those which have some reference to the sort of pedigree I have made out. I see the father of the Knightly Guy is described, at his interment, "Tyler". Are we to understand that he was in the respectable occupation of a roofer of houses, or importeth it some goodly office appertaining unto chivalry, now only known at Dr. Benets Hill? Alas! I tremble for the answer to this question. The resource I have, and, if I cannot save the honor of the family by any other means, I am determined he shall have been a Free Mason. I enviously (?) with many acknowledgements of your goodness in interesting yourself about these now very uninteresting people - what would gratify me very much would be to learn how far they are (with the Forsters of Aldermaston, Berks and Harpenden Oxon both now extinct) of the same stock as those Bamburgh-Northumberland whence they come (circa Edw II or III) to Hanslope (?) It crescent (?) again them to have been ~~thus~~ only a junior house.

Such, or any other information you gain me about these good ~~family~~ folks (who if not ~~very~~ interesting are quite inoffensive) will confer a particular obligation upon me, independently of which it will always give me great pleasure to hear of yourself or your family. With my best thanks to Mr. & Mrs. Protheroe for their obliging attention to me, with my kind regards to Mr. Fraser, and my mother's best compliments to yourselves, I conclude, and am, my dear Sir, your very faithful - and obliged. W Forster.

279 Letter: "Dear Sir, after much search I have found the pedigree of the Gregsons of Turnditch down to the time of the family becoming extinct there and now send it to you.
As to the subject you mention, it has been in some measure the subject of conversation owing to your having introduced the subject into conversation in the country, notwithstanding my express injunction that you should not, and your express promise that you would not do so. In this respect you must be well aware that you have repeatedly acted in a way that I have just reason to complain of. It has been at all times my endeavour to treat you with kindness and respect, and you certainly have acted improperly in endeavouring to promote the purpose of your enquiries by bringing my name into the business. It is certainly most ungenerous and unfriendly treatment. The inconvenience I suffer from your indiscretion you certainly cannot hear of with perfect satisfaction of mind to yourself. I have endeavoured to do everything for you in my power and to promote the purpose of your enquiries, and am, your sincere well wisher, J.B.

17, double, blank pages follow to the end of this book

Most of the pedigrees in this book relate to people of Royal, or Noble, birth.

Some are beautifully written, with coloured drawings of arms, and explanations of the arms.   Others are roughly scribbled, without second names or dates.   There are also letters, either to or from clients, or fellow genealogists.   On these letters sometimes notes have been scribbled, and any space on sides or back used for notes or draft pedigrees.   The references seem to relate to the sources of the material, and might lead to fuller, and clearer, information.
 Towards the end of the book are several printed pages relating to places and people, which have obviously been taken from some reference

Some pages contain material which is not in sequence, as though a double page had had other pages put between the two sheets, so that one side of a double page may appear several pages before the opposite side.   Some continuing pages seem to be either continuations of, alternatives to, or thoughts on one pedigree.
